

Hello Charlotte,

As you probably know – the ‘Cyber Threat’ is everywhere now.

It poses a very real and immediate threat to our lives – both personal and professional.

It isn't a time to panic, but it is a time to take immediate action to protect your business and your clients.

For example, if the data you hold about them is compromised you could be liable to a costly fine under the new GDPR directive which comes into force on 25th May.

So, what can you do?

First of all, reduce your risk. Here's a link to an interesting infographic from the National Cyber Security Centre...

<https://www.ncsc.gov.uk/information/infographics-ncsc>

And here's an article from the BBC website today which mentions the GDPR among other aspects of the cyber threat

While that NCSC infographic is useful – and we always recommend ‘best practice’ and good old common sense - it will merely reduce your risk, that's all.

Is that it?

No. The next thing you need to do is protect your liability – so that in the unfortunate event you do suffer an attack, your business' financial loss is contained.
